McClellan's Politics. It has been often asserted by General McClellan's friends that politics formed no guide to his military conduct. McClellan has shown that he possesses one of the prime qualities of a good commanderthe ability to be silent. For more than a year he has been able to maintain a most perfect stillness as to every thing pertaining to slavery. This same faculty is of so much importance that it may yet make him a politician. People generally couple wisdom with silence. For more than a year McClelian has not spoken a word, even to his most intimate friends, as to the political aspects of the war.

The public at first had their surmises that at heart he was a friend to the institution of slavery. He dealt with it and with the rebels very tenderly in practice. He defended Washington, organized a monstrous army, viewed the stove-pipes of Munson's Hill and the wooden guns of Manassas through telescopes and from balloons, and maintained towards the enemy a most respectful demeanor. People suspected him of a want of ardor in the The Division under command of Gen.
The Bishmond papers praised their moderate and gentlemanly adversary. Rebel armies, when they found themselves outfiscation; had no effect upon the course pursued towards the rebels by McCiellan, ry for the Executive to use his war power over the heads of pro-slavery Generals.—
The proclamation of 1862 was issued. 1t thus became necessary for these officers to Bolivar and Fairfax the roads were good. take note of the fact that slavery was, under general orders, intended to be hurt. How did McClellan treat the proclamation? An order was insued to his command upon the duty of obedience to orders. Not a syllable escaped him touching the cause of the war por of the merits of the conflict. It was the duty of the soldier to obey, and be was a soldier. People had shelr suspicions that he was more of a soldier than a patriot, escaped his lips. The President had long since been con vinced of his want of sympathy with the cause, and at length went so far as to relieve him from command. The subterrameans of New York received him with the utmost affection. No one else. This fellow-feeling was very significant as to his be pe affiliations, but he said he was a soldier and his tengue was sealed. Everybody surmised that the confident of John Van Buren, Pernando Wood and Isaah Rynders must be in sentiment the opponent of the Administration, but it could not be proven. He is the announced Presidential candidate of the subterraneaus, but still no tal is masterly silence. But finally an indiscreet but bosom friend, whose sun sets within this very State of Ohio, during the unguarded manusate of a speech in Congress, bus dispelled the spell of silence, camp is in constant resultness for cases with the spell of allence, camp is in constant resultness for cases with the spell of the modern Napoteon as a politician is totally sunk. It would have been enough to rain much better prospects, these associations of his, without this indiscretion of Sunset Cor.

Without this indiscretion of Sunset Cor. without this indiscretion of Sunset Cox. But he is now before the world with a creed and in order that there may be no quibbling as to its doctrines we give it a liberal publication. In a speech lately delivered by Mr. Cox in the House, we find the fol- Assistant Quartermaster of Ohio, who aslowing:

"I assert here as a fact, which I do know, that the President was, about the middle of July, infermed distinctly of the mode by which, and the principles upon which, General McClellan intended the war to be advised that McClellan disapproved of any infraction of the laws of civilized and Christian warfare; that he disapproved Christian warfare; that he disapproved of arbitary arrests in places where the insurjection did not prevail; that he did not contemplate any seiture of any private property for the support of the army, or for pushing and desolating the region he invaded; but that he curnestly pleaded that the war should be carried on as a duel that the war should be carried on as a duel that the road will be built next summer. between organized armies and not against non-combattants; that the instituti the States should be protected; that no proclamation of freedom, incensing a ser-vile race to indiscriminate massacre of helpless whites, and inviting the destrucmitted; in fine, that wherever it is possi-ble, the military should be subordinate to the civil authority, and the Constitution alone ahould be the guide and glory of
